When You Need To Talk To Someone That Understands What You Are Going Through

Geoffrey D. Nusbaum, Ph.D., director of DVIFG's Medical Psychotherapy and BioMedical Ethics Service, is uniquely qualified to help you cope while trying to conceive. A Fellow and Diplomate of the American Board of Medical Psychotherapy and a Fellow of the International Council of Sex Education and Parenthood at American University in Washington, DC. Dr. Nusbaum holds a clinical certificate from The American Association for Marriage and Family Therapy and is a Founding Member of the Mental Health Issues Section of the American Society for Reproductive Medicine. He has over 25 years of experience counseling people on how to deal with the stress associated with a medical condition, including infertility.

Caring and supportive, Geoffrey D. Nusbaum, Ph.D. can assist you and your partner in developing effective coping strategies. From stress management to mourning early pregnancy loss, counseling sessions are individually focused on each couple's unique situation. Sometimes just attempting to put your feelings into words can be empowering and can help you feel less isolated. You may not be able to control the outcome of treatment, but you can control the process of how you deal with it.
